Markets

Global equity markets traded sideways in September despite US bond yields reaching multi-decade highs. The US 30-year yield rose above 5.61%, its highest level since 2002, while the 10-year yield reached 5.15%, a level last seen in 2007. Renewed inflation fears drove the move, as oil prices rebounded on the re-escalation of conflict in the Middle East with no clear resolution in sight. US equity returns remained concentrated in the mega-caps, with the AI thematic sustaining momentum in a narrow pocket of the market and the equal-weighted S&P 500 underperforming.

Domestically, the Australian market underperformed global peers following a further rate hike during the month. Selling was indiscriminate across the market-cap spectrum, and large caps were not spared. The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) raised the cash rate by 25bps to 4.60%, its highest level since 2011 and the fourth hike this year. Alongside rising energy prices from the ongoing war in Iran, the RBA pointed to AI-related demand and excessive government spending as drivers of inflation remaining above target.

Major Contributors to Performance

Over the month the largest contributors were an overweight position in Bapcor (BAP.ASX, +27%), an overweight position in SKS Technologies Group (SKS.ASX, +32%), and owning IPD Group (IPG.ASX, +16%).

Bapcor Ltd (BAP.ASX) returned +27% during the month as the market continued to reward its stronger-than-expected FY26 result, delivered in August. We first built a significant position through the February 2026 recapitalisation at 60cps, adding further via on-market purchases following the relisting. We had met management during Bapcor's 2014 IPO but never held a material position, wary of the acquisition-led growth strategy - a caution later vindicated as that strategy unravelled, with the share price falling more than 90% peak-to-trough at the recap price.

We like the automotive parts and servicing space for its defensive characteristics. Vehicle servicing and parts replacement are largely non-discretionary - driven by fleet age, usage and safety requirements rather than consumer sentiment - and the addressable market keeps growing as the vehicle parc ages and expands. EV penetration is only 2% of vehicle parc. Trade distribution is also concentrated in a duopoly structure, which supports rational pricing and scale advantages in inventory, distribution and supplier terms. It's a structurally attractive backdrop for Bapcor’s main division Burson which represents ~40% of $2bn in group sales.

What attracted us specifically was, first, that the recapitalisation largely dealt with balance sheet risk, and second, the appointment of CEO Chris Wilesmith in January 2026. Wilesmith is a proven auto parts operator, with 13 years in Supercheap Auto's executive leadership team, including seven years as Managing Director. Feedback from industry contacts and suppliers gave us great confidence in his ability to turn the business around.

Wilesmith has since brought in a slew of new executives to drive the turnaround: inventory is being right-sized, stock turns are improving, fast-moving stock is being moved out to branches to improve DIFOT/sales, and pricing is being adjusted against competitors to lift gross margins. Balance sheet risk has also reduced meaningfully, with net debt falling from $195m after the recap to $136m in just four months of trading under the new CEO, against a difficult macro backdrop of elevated fuel prices. Both Trade (Burson) and Network/Wholesale revenue returned to growth in 2H, and a portfolio review is underway to simplify the group via divestment of smaller, non-core assets, freeing up capital and management focus.

We believe the Trade distribution division, Burson, which represents $800m of revenue is worth in excess of $1bn vs an enterprise value of the group which is ~$660m even after the significant re-rate in share price. Eventually, we expect to make a significant return (potentially multiples) from this investment with financial risk diminishing greatly post a better-than-expected result.

Major Detractors from Performance

The largest detractors from performance included owning Motorcycle Holdings (MTO.ASX, -15%), owning Praemium (PPS.ASX, -17%), and owning Galan Lithium (GLN.ASX, -23%).

Motorcycle Holdings (MTO.ASX) returned -15% during the month, as risk-off sentiment across discretionary retailers following the RBA rate hike saw the stock hand back much of its recent strength. We believe this was an overreaction to an exceptional FY26 result. Despite rising rates and a weak consumer, MTO grew revenue 21% (+5% organic) and EBIT 37%. It also lifted its share of new motorcycle sales to 19.6%, up from 12% in 2022, making it the market leader. We rate management highly, and the acquisitions of Peter Stevens Motorcycles and Harley Heaven at asset backing were compelling deals that further boosted share. With the balance sheet now in net cash and the stock on 5x FY27 EV/EBIT, we see significant value for investors prepared to look through the cycle and ignore short-term macro noise.

Outlook & Strategy

Australian small caps having outperformed large caps from the market sell off in March 2025 (the US tariffs) but have struggled since the end of January this year as the backdrop of persistent inflation and thus rising rates have dampened the economy. With the RBA now four hikes into the year and bond yields at multi-decade highs, the near-term macro backdrop remains subdued. We believe September's sell-off has created opportunities, with quality businesses sold down alongside weaker ones on interest rate hiking fears.

Our focus remains on looking through the noise and investing for the medium-to-long term. Our team's focus on mid-cycle earnings, strong cash generating businesses keeps us focused on the long-term game. Corporate activity remains elevated as the recent bids for Reliance Worldwide (RWC.ASX) and Steadfast (SDF.ASX) have demonstrated. Both takeovers were instigated by foreign entities (Brookfield and Amwins/Dragoneer/KKR, respectively). This suggests small cap valuations remain low enough to attract takeover interest, despite the global rate rises to date.
