Commentary

The Spheria Opportunities Fund was flat for the month, outperforming the Benchmark by 0.4%.

A late stage bull market is characterised by irrational exuberance with speculators growing in numbers and implicitly ignoring fundamental performance measures. When participants lose sight of fundamentals, companies that spin a good story are massively rewarded. Given the scarcity value in the Australian small to midcap universe these kinds of stocks levitate to enormous heights. Eventually the weight of money fatigues given a lack of fundamental support and these top performing stocks begin to drop. We began to witness this trend in October with several high-flying stocks falling significantly. The corollary being that many maligned stocks were beneficiaries from the rotation of capital. This trend clearly benefited the performance of our strategies in October.

Wisetech (WTC) was the most interesting headline in our space last month after a negative research report was the catalyst for a sharp fall in the share price from giddy heights. When you are on 120x PE, you make 34 acquisitions in a few years and your cash flow generation is relatively weak for a software company, there is ammunition aplenty. The distinct lack of consistency in that a negative report needs to be refuted whilst a positive report on a company is never questioned is simply hard to swallow. Why the share price matters so much for any company is also a red flag? If it falls to more palatable levels isn't it better buying it cheaper? Isn't that safer for all those mum and dad investors rather than buying at nose-bleed levels? The proof will be laid to bare in the next few years with the risk reward equation in our view skewed to the downside given the lack of valuation support and a risky acquisition strategy. We liken Wisetech to Computershare's rise in the dotcom boom bust, it may be a good business, it may be a sensible strategy, but any missteps and the share price falls can be catastrophic. For those that don't remember, Computershare rallied to 150x PE only to collapse from $10 to $1.35 as the challenges of integrating a myriad of acquisitions in various jurisdiction and different operating environments proved far more difficult than management and investors had contemplated. One learning from the Computershare fall is that valuation does matter, and at its lowest ebb there was a great opportunity to buy a decent business at a reasonable multiple. It's one of the reasons we maintain an open mind when investing in the small cap universe. Share prices movements are merely an entry/exit mechanism, the market can be very inefficient at both extremes

WTC - down 33% off its peak to end of October - was not the only company that has seen a significant de-rate with peak to trough declines across the high PE complex including Appen (down 32%), Afterpay (down 23%), Promedius (down 28%) and Nearmap (down 38%). The multiples being paid for these companies still feel very aggressive, particularly given a couple don't even make money (depends on your definition these days) when accounting for items including capitalised costs and share based compensation.

The adage that nothing good happens after midnight can be adapted to the sharemarket in that nothing good tends to happen after 100x (PE). Those that choose to sprint a marathon wearing a blindfold might be in for an exhilarating run but are unlikely to finish the race. We instead have chosen a steady pace in these heady times. We are currently seeing the benefit of this in our strategies, although markets are very fickle and good companies can remain under valued for long periods and heavily promoted companies that hit a pothole can regain favour quickly. This is the case particularly, when money is cheap and risk-taking a function of ultra-cheap money has been a highly successful strategy for too many years to remember.

The best performers for the month were Class (CL1), Mortgage Choice (MOC) and City Chic (CCX) which rallied 36%, 25% and 12% respectively. The former two having been sold off aggressively over the last couple of years while CCX has continued its upwards trajectory after divesting a portfolio of weaker brands which included a tonne of lease liabilities.

On the negative side of the ledger were Bega Cheese (BGA), GTN and Ht&E (HT1), which declined 21%, 13% and 11% respectively. Bega warned of lower profits due primarily to the continued impact from the drought on milk supply and therein price of farm gate milk (their biggest input). GTN and Ht&E are exposed to the radio advertising market which has remained weak, both fell on the back of a significant profit warning from SXL which is a competitor to Ht&E and a supplier for GTN.
